SANDIA NATIONAL LABORATORIES

Sandia National Laboratories, located on Kirtland Air Force Base, is one of America's premier research engineering laboratories. Its primary business is national security. The laboratory is managed by Lockheed Martin Corporation for the U.S. Department of Energy's National Nuclear Security Administration. For more information, go to www.sandia.gov.

Sandia was established in 1945 in Albuquerque, N.M., as part of Los Alamos National Laboratory during the Manhattan Project, which produced the first nuclear weapons. It became an independent laboratory in 1949. The laboratory's work involves missions in five key areas:

- Nuclear weapons ensuring the stockpile is safe, secure, reliable, and can support our nation's deterrence policy.
- Nonproliferation and assessments reducing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, the threat of nuclear accidents, and the potential for damage to the environment.
- Military technologies and applications helping to maintain superiority of America's armed forces.
- Homeland security helping to protect our nation against terrorism.
- Energy and infrastructure assurance keeping America's resources and information flowing.

Sandia currently has about 8,500 employees consisting of highly educated and skilled engineers, scientists, technologists, and administrative support staff. About 18 percent of employees hold doctoral degrees and another 30 percent have master's degrees. Sandia's annual budget is about $2.3 billion.

Sandia works closely with industry, universities, and other government agencies to bring new technologies to the marketplace. Sandia may negotiate with industry to sign cooperative R&D agreements that permit the labs to collaborate with industry on mutually beneficial research. Other options for pursuing shared interests include licensing agreements, technical assistance, the use of unique Sandia facilities, technical personnel exchanges, and memoranda of understanding.

Many technologies developed at Sandia benefit Americans directly or indirectly. A few notable examples include:

- The laminar-flow clean room, used worldwide for microelectronics and pharmaceutical manufacturing and hospital surgery.

- Bomb-disablement technologies that have allowed technicians to "render safe" both crude and sophisticated explosive devices without approaching the bombs.
- MicroChemLab™ technology, making possible handheld and unmanned vehicle-carried systems for detecting and identifying chemical and biological agents.
- Radiation-hardened microchips that ensure defense and space hardware electronics can operate in high-radiation environments.
- Synthetic aperture radar (SAR), an all-weather, day/night imaging technology that have enabled mapping with a precision thousands of times greater than standard maps.
